

Terrorists sing their foe

ADELAIDE. — A new breed of terrorist, dedicated to improving the health of Australians, is rapidly becoming the prime enemy of cigarette manufacturers.

The target of these terrorists is "unhealthy" advertising.

The Black Lung Liberation Front, for instance, is made up of smokers so resentful of the habit that they cut off billboards at the base and burn them.

Like the British SAS squad they rely for success on stealth and swiftness. Their motto "Light up a billboard, you'll be so glad you did" does not have quite the same ring as "Who Dares, Wins", but many an embassy is believed to have fallen to the men from Black Lung.

Dr Garry Egger, a health promotion expert with the NSW Health Commission, yesterday told the ANZAAS congress about the Black Lung and other secret groups opposed to the promotion of unhealthy products.

BUGA-UP — Billboard-Utilising Graffitists Against Unhealthy Products — was the most revolutionary, he said.

Founded by an ideologically committed intellectual printer with a team of "apprentices", it was directed towards defacing hoardings advertising cigarettes and fast foods with messages like "puff it and snuff it".

A more moderate organisation, MOP UP — Movement Opposing Promotion of Unhealthy Products — had had what it regarded as a great victory last week with Paul Hogan being banned from cigarette promotions, he said.

Dr Garry Egger, a health promotion expert with the NSW Health Commission, yesterday told the ANZAAS congress about the Black Lung and other secret groups opposed to the promotion of unhealthy products.

BUGA-UP — Billboard-Utilising Graffitists Against Unhealthy Products — was the most revolutionary, he said.

Founded by an ideologically committed intellectual printer with a team of "apprentices", it was directed towards defacing hoardings advertising cigarettes and fast foods with messages like "puff it and snuff it".

A more moderate organisation, MOP UP — Movement Opposing Promotion of Unhealthy Products — had had what it regarded as a great victory last week with Paul Hogan being banned from cigarette promotions, he said.

Dr Egger told the ANZAAS section on health education that as Commonwealth health authorities move further towards adopting a policy of telling people that health was a community responsibility these fringe groups would become more active.

PAGE 16: ANZAAS congress